A LESSON OF THE BIBLE

Rev. W. M. Kincaid's Forcible Sermon Last Night at Central Union Church.

"What is a Christian city?" was the question which Rev. William Morris Kincaid asked last night in his sermon at Central Union Church.

The question had a peculiar significance from a religious standpoint. The speaker dwelt at length on the conditions which prevail in cosmopolitan Honolulu. The sermon was a strong one and delivered with an earnestness which bespoke the pastor's feeling upon the subject.

The speaker related how Antioch became the second city of the Christian faith in the early days of the Christian era, and how previous to that time it was notorious for its vice and gross sensuality. To this city the disciples of Jesus came. It was then the stirring whirlpool of life, sensual and vicious, but this did not deter the ministers of Christ from bringing their faith to plant there. The Emperor Justinian attempted to restore the heathen worship in his vast empire. He visited Antioch expecting to be received by the enthusiastic subjects of the realm, but within the very temple where he expected to raise the heathen gods he found a scene of desolation and loneliness. The change was brought about by the gospel of Christ.

Mr. Kincaid then launched into the subject and its especial significance to Honolulu, which, he said, had in its elements of the making of a Christian city. Vice and wrong may dominate a city but this would not deter the gospel of Christ from shaking its foundations.

There was inspiration in the career of Antioch which placed great opportunities for Christians in this City. The truest interests of the City were with the Christians. It would be the same if the Christians did not rise to meet their opportunities as if the Apostle Paul had resolved not to lift his finger or give the gospel to the saving of Rome. The gospel of Jesus Christ believes in the possibility of a Christian city as the highest ideal of its teachings and the greatest achievement of God. Whether we will have it or not, the city is to be the dominating and determining factor in shaping the character of the future greatness of the spread of the gospel.

"The city is an opportunity as a strategic point and center of power; that is the New Testament conception of a city," said Mr. Kincaid. "We hear about the extraordinary growth of cities which the greatest century, now drawing to a close, has shown. On the Continent of Europe there is a widespread movement to keep the people away from the centers of life by offering them inducements to settle in remote and secluded places. The movement is doomed to failure. More and more the influences of the world are drawing them to the cities."

The speaker described the growth of the Old World cities and those of America in the last century. It is a most astounding fact that in all this growth the gospel of Jesus Christ looks not upon it with the Old Testament fear but with the New Testament courage, regarding it as furnishing a glorious opportunity to spread the gospel among its inhabitants. "I tell you," continued the speaker, "that it is worth more to the redemption of the world to establish a Christian city than it would be to evangelize an entire province in the wilds of Africa. It amounts to more in actual moral force, I am aware that souls are as precious in one place as in another, but the power of a Christian city is greater than whole continents of prairie and jungle."

"Cities are great sounding boards and every blow struck there resounds from shore to shore."

"Just what do I mean by a Christian city. I do not mean one where every person is a Christian or one where the Christian religion is established by law. Not at all. But I mean a city distinguished by a certain temper and by an atmosphere of power and character which is created by the gospel of Jesus Christ."

"What is the difference between a heathen city and a so-called Anglo-Saxon Christian city? It is the difference in the moral force and in the inspiration in the standard forces and in the faith that goes for good."

"In Antioch lust was defied. The sky was leaden in its dull hopelessness. It was a heathen city. Influences went quietly to work there as quietly as do the influences which cause an iceberg to break away from the glacier in the far north, which, floating down into warmer zones, gradually melts away and finally disappears. Look at Antioch three centuries later and what do you see. A city where every person is a Christian. A new ideal lives in that city; a new standard has been borne; a new conception of life has taken root in its soil."

"What is a Christian city? A Christian city discloses its Christian or un-Christian character in the ideals that govern it."

"Look around you in Honolulu. You see our sin and are ashamed. You see a bewildering aggregation of vice and temptation and someone sneers at the complex life of this little city and wants to know if this is the result of the work of the third missionary fathers. That makes our failure seem so sad when we have a conviction of what we ought to be. Heartstrings have music in them even though they be silent. But let some great wrong begin and see then if those chords of moral sentiment will not be struck. Let some great danger arise and see if there will not be a profound expression on the part of the population of their faith in God. Let some propaganda go forth in the name of God to speak words of righteousness and see if the hearts of the people will not respond."

"There is more faith in God in Honolulu than some of us have any idea of. There is more practical righteousness between man and man, more true brotherly kindness than will ever be known until the last day reveals it."

"Now it is for the city of Honolulu I have been prompted to give you this message. I see by the young men here tonight that you can live in Honolulu almost as though in a cloister. Your personal righteousness is affecting a large circle for good, or your unrighteousness is poisoning the stream from which the multitudes are drinking. I am speaking to the young men who through the elective franchise are going to help mould the city which your fathers builded. The young men who are going to have a part in determining the standard of success of its future. Oh, think of the influence of this city, of its importance to the multitudes that will within its limits be taught lessons of truth and of faith, or lessons of unbelief and unrighteousness. Let us go forth from this place tonight as Christians and make our city more and more a Christian city—a city of righteousness, of law and order, of justice."
